I. THE LAND BEFORE THE BUILDING

In the beginning the plot was empty. (In the 1815 Blue Book, on 31 Union Square West, there is reference to 0 structures.)

The larger district around it had already caught the eye of the shrewd. (Long before an axe cut into the first elderly tree on the future Washington Square, well-informed real estate speculators—Astors, Goelets and Schermerhorns in the lead—had bought property to the north. The block between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, from Union Square to Fifth Avenue sold for $197,000 in 1836, the lots that fronted on Fifth Avenue were valued at $57,000 each. Union Place had been, early in the nineteenth century, an exclusive suburb for the country villas of Goelets and Roosevelts whose town houses stood near the tip of the island. Their park was surrounded by a massive iron fence which lasted until 1870, when the Place became the Square, already part of the flourishing theater center that had forced out the country houses.)

The character of the surrounding streets was shifting fast. (The small eighteenth-century shops of Cherry Street and Catherine Street that had swelled and moved to larger and more fashionable quarters on Broadway were now beginning to ring this upper square. Tiffany moved its five hundred craftsmen and sales people into a new iron building at Fifteenth and Broadway — "hideous," some thought the style, which was tolerated by others because it found use for the excess iron and ironworkers left unemployed at the close of the Civil War—and Brentano's very literary emporium came to rest for a while at 33 Union Square.)

By mid-century the lot had filled with fine masonry. (In the 1853 Perris Maps, on 31 Union Square West, there is reference to 3 structures; Brick or Stone dwellings first class (slate or metal roof & coped) with Brick or Stone Extension, Brick or Stone Store first class, Brick or Stone dwellings first class (slate or metal roof & coped) with Framed Extension and skylights lighting the top floor only.) A little more than a decade later the tally shrank, for (In the 1867 Dripps Plan, on 31 Union Square West, there is reference to 2 structures; Building, Building.)

II. EARLY OCCUPANTS

The address quietly hosted businesses. An architectural partnership resided there: (BOGART & CUYLER / John Bogart, John Y. Cuyler / 1874, 31 Union Sq.) Later the site bore a manufacturer's name, as (In the 1885 Robinsons Atlas, on 31 Union Square West, there is written 'White Manfg.Co.' as well as reference to 2 Structures; Brick building, Brick building.) By the end of the century a modest structure stood, since (In the 1897 Bromleys Atlas, on 31 Union Square West, there is reference to 1 Structure; 4 Story Brick building.)

The moment itself was captured by a camera nearby: (The photograph above, of a cabby and his hansom, was taken in Union Square, at Broadway and Sixteenth Street, in 1896.)

III. THE BANK AND ITS FOUNDERS

The institution destined to define the address had deep local roots. (The Bank of the Metropolis is a flourishing outgrowth of the movement of business to the up-town section of New York. Union Square, where its banking house is established, was thirty years ago a fashionable residence-district. To-day it is surrounded by some of the largest retail business houses in New York, and important manufacturing and wholesale industries are plentiful in the neighborhood.)

It began with modest men and modest quarters: (The bank was organized in 1871, and commenced operations in June of that year. The first President was W. A. Kissam (who died in the same year), and the original place of business was 31 Union Square. A removal to 17 Union Square followed six years later, and in 1888 the bank took the more commodious quarters at 29 Union Square, which it now occupies.)

Its leadership was distinguished: (Robert Schell, the President, who has held the position steadily for twenty years, was formerly a well-known jewelry merchant in Maiden Lane. William B. Isham, the Vice-President (since 1885), was prominent in the leather trade ; and the Cashier, Theodore Rogers, has occupied the same position since the formation of the bank.) Its board glittered with names of consequence: (They are Charles L. Tiffany, of Tiffany & Company; Hon. Samuel Sloan, President of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad; Robert Schell, the President; Joseph Park, of Park & Tilford; William Steinway, of Steinway & Sons; William B. Isham, capitalist; W. D. Sloane, of W. & J. Sloane; and Hicks Arnold, of Arnold, Constable & Company.)

Its finances were robust, for (The bank has a deposit line of nearly $7,000,000; and a surplus of $700,000 has been accumulated on the capital of $300,000. The shares of the Bank of the Metropolis have a market value of over $400 each.) In the directories of the era it appeared simply as (Bank of the Metropolis, 31 Union Square.) The building's very foundation was rooted in commerce: (Founded in 1871, the Bank of the Metropolis was formed to serve the needs of the businesses located around Union Square. In order to attract the business of leading publishers, jewelers, and other merchants, the board of directors included such powerful neighborhood businessmen as Louis Comfort Tiffany and Charles Scribner.)

IV. THE SKYSCRAPER RISES

Then came the architect and the tower. (No. 31, the former Bank of the Metropolis (Bruce Price, 1902), is a fine example of the architect's favored Renaissance Revival style. Although the building's front features polished marble columns, the entire structure is, in effect, columnar or tripartite in form, with a base, shaft, and capital represented by its three stone sections.) It was (An early and unwitting sliver building, this neo-Renaissance slab now houses a restaurant in its original banking rooms, a place for SUPERMAN'S lunch).

The skyscraper announced a changing district: (The sixteen story skyscraper, designed by Bruce Price In 1901, was symbolic of the tall structures invading ladies Mile In the early twentieth century and hastening the retreat of the fashionable shopping district up Fifth Avenue above Thirty-fourth Street.) Beside it stood a neighbor, (The Union Building, a Moorish Venetian structure designed by Alfred Zucker In 1891.)

The neighborhood it entered was already crowded with the garment trade: (More than a dozen ladies' tailoring establishments could he found in the 1900 business directories of New York, in close proximity to the new Waldorf Astoria Hotel.) The tower's upper reaches teemed with trades, for (The following year. Bruce Price designed the sixteen-story office tower for the Bank of the Metropolis on the northwest corner of Sixteenth Street and Union Square West. Here, loo. The upper floors were rented to at least three shirtwaist-makers, three different ladies and children's undergarment manufacturers, in addition to six different architectural offices.) And the surrounding streets followed suit: (The side streets near ladies Mile were also invaded by lofty buildings used to house the expanding garment industry that now reached as far north as Thirty-Sixth Street. Ten and twelve-story loft buildings, sometimes as narrow as one city lot, were erected by the hundreds, flooding the fashionable shopping district with thousands of sweatshop workers who had little extra money to purchase the goods in the fancy shop windows along Ladies Mile, but lent the area an unsavory quality.)

The tower itself embodied a great change in the cityscape, for (What doomed the format, besides changing tastes, was the arrival of skyscrapers, which put an end once and for all to a city of roughly uniform building heights.)

V. THE CRITICS WEIGH IN

Critics admired its composition. (This narrow old bank is one of the city's more appealing smaller towers, a lovely eclectic creation. There is a wonderful, gently bowed Ionic portico at the bottom, a slender, almost Sleek shaft, and an enormous, elaborate cornice. It feels like a building Louis Sullivan would have designed had he been a Beaux-Arts architect; some of the ornament even seems a watered down version of Sullivan's, although the overall aesthetic is clearly a more classical and academic one. Price never quite found a style and never did a truly great building, but he was a deft, intuitive maker of compositions, and this is one of his best works.) That same account paired the address with its neighbor, noting (The Bank of metropolis now 31 Union Square West and 33 Union Square West.)

Another judged that (Its Union Square front is extremely narrow Between an Ionic portico and a heavy cornice is a sleek, tastefully ornamented shaft; as with other Price buildings, it is a forerunner of the stripped classicism later practiced by such architects as Paul Philippe Cret.) In photographic surveys it was placed within its block as (MIDDLE EAT SIDE 3. Union Square West, Nos 31-41.)

VI. THE ARCHITECTURE IN DETAIL

The building spoke a rich classical language. (Occupying a commanding corner location, the building superbly demonstrates Bruce Price's ability to use the requirements of function, the dictates of site, and a classical vocabulary to create a skyscraper that emanates authority. The neo-Renaissance limestone tower is enhanced by classical elements traditionally associated with American bank architecture—most notably, a bowed two-story portico with monumental polished-granite columns, lions' heads, consoles, and foliated spandrels.)

The design logic followed the column itself. (The site demanded a long, thin building, and Price's vision related the skyscraper to a classical column. The tripartite scheme—a rusticated base, a nine-story midsection, and a capital topped by a prominent copper cornice—is a commanding visual, rather than functional, solution to organizing a tall structure.) The architect had a philosophy: (Price, an influential architect of skyscrapers, once remarked that "their aerial aspect [is] of more value to the city as a whole than the distorted partial values that, as a rule, are all we can obtain from the street.") And so (His neo-Classical vocabulary fuses well here with the dictates of skyscraper construction to create a distinctly modern, urban building.)

Landmark scholarship echoed this reading: (Price was an important early skyscraper designer with a particular interest in adapting the tripartite form of the column to tall buildings. This neo-Renaissance limestone faced example is clearly massed in Price's preferred base-shaft-capital manner.)

VII. THE BUILDING ON THE MAPS

The atlases tracked the finished tower. (In the 1916 Atlas of the Borough of Manhattan, on 31 Union Square West, there is written 'Bank of the Metropolis' as well as reference to 2 Structures; 16 Story Brick building with Store and Elevators and Fire proof building (steel construction) and 1 Story Brick Extension.) A later record noted a taller count: (In the 1930 Land Book of the Borough of Manhattan, on 31 Union Square West, there is written 'Bank of the Metropolis' as well as reference to 2 Structures; 17 Story Brick building with Elevators and Fire proof building (steel construction).)

VIII. MERGERS AND NEW NAMES

The bank did not remain independent. (The bank was absorbed by the Bank of the Manhattan Company in 1918; the resulting entity merged with Chase in 1955 to become the Chase Manhattan Bank, now JP Morgan Chase & Co.) Concisely put elsewhere: (The bank, founded in 1871, served local businesses until 1918, when it merged with the Bank of the Manhattan Company (now J. P. Morgan Chase).) And again: (The Bank of the Metropolis, founded in 1871 to serve the needs of businesses in the Union Square area, maintained its offices on the square until 1918, when it was absorbed by the Bank of Manhattan.)

The successor's name appeared in directories: (STATE BANKS. Bk. of Metropolis, 31 Union sq.) and later (STATE BANKS. Manhattan Co., 40 Wall, 31 Union sq., 333 Madison av.) A portrait painter even gave it as her mailing point: (Address: care Bank Manhattan Co., 31 Union Sq., New York 3, N.Y.) The maps confirmed the change of ownership, as (In the 1955 Manhattan Land Book, on 31 Union Square West, there is written 'Chase Manhattan Bank' as well as reference to 1 Structure; 16 Story Brick or Stone or Concrete building with Store and Elevators and Fire proof building (steel construction).)

IX. REDEVELOPMENT PRESSURES AND LANDMARK STATUS

The surrounding block faced the developer's eye. (In June 1930, the Klein estate was reportedly in negotiations with five developers seeking to purchase the site and its buildings. But it was not until 1983, when William Zeckendorf Jr., son of the legendary developer of the 1950s and 1960s who had died in 1976, acquired a two-year option on the site, that progress began to be made. Zeckendorf retained Davis, Brody & Associates to develop plans for the block's redevelopment as a cluster of four superscaled apartment towers set atop a seven-story base.)

The plans stirred resistance. (To realize the Zeckendorf plan, the site needed to be rezoned, a move that was rigorously opposed by the Union Square Community Coalition, a group largely made up of newer residents who had moved into lofts and apartments and feared the impact of real estate speculation on their rented homes.) In the end, (Both the district and the Zeckendorf proposal for a twenty-six-story project were approved by the City Planning Commission in November 1984 and by the Board of Estimate in January 1985.)

Out of this ferment came protection. (Concerns about the fate of historic buildings on other sites around the square led to the designation as landmarks of the Lincoln Building (R. H. Robertson, 1890), 1-3 Union Square West; the Bank of the Metropolis (Bruce Price, 1903), 31 Union Square West; the Century Building (William Schickel, 1881), 33 East Seventeenth Street; the Everett Building (Starrett & Van Vleck, 1908), 45 East Seventeenth Street; and the Germania Life Insurance Company Building (D'Oench & Yost, 1911), later the Guardian Life Building, 50 Union Square East.)

The official record states it plainly: ((FORMER) BANK OF THE METROPOLIS 1902-03; 1979 CONVERSION 31 UNION SQUARE WEST (ALSO KNOWN AS 19-23 EAST 16TH STREET), MANHATTAN ARCHITECT: BRUCE PRICE DESIGNATED: JULY 12, 1988.)

X. A NEW LIFE

The tower was reborn for modern use. (Today the former banking floor is a restaurant, Blue Water Grill, and many of the upper floors were converted to apartments in 1979.) As one guide summarized, (A restaurant occupies the main floor with residences above.) The restaurant appears in listings simply as (Blue Water Grill (31 Union Square W)) and among seafood destinations as (Blue Water Grill (31 Union Square W): Seafood, Sunday...95). A music venue also lived there, listed under (WHERE TO HEAR METROPOLIS, 31 Union Sq W, 675-0851), and later remembered among the closed establishments simply as (Metropolis) and (Blue Water Grill).

XI. THE NEIGHBORING TABLE — 21 EAST 16TH STREET

Across the way, the address of 21 East 16th Street told a parallel food story. Once it was a vegetarian haunt, where (Brownie's became a destination for health fanatics, vegetarians, Factory associates, and Warhol after his shooting in 1968 when his doctor told him to keep an eye on his diet.) In time, (Danny Meyer's Union Square Cafe now occupies the Brownie's address.)

The café itself was a landmark of dining: (Union Square Cafe became one of the final transforming presences in the neighborhood when it opened in 1985, a natural extension of a revamped park and a tremendously successful greenmarket.) Its layout was distinctive: (Danny Meyer's restaurant is broken into four precincts in two halves: half one, as you enter, includes the long dining bar (featuring oyster and wine specials, and the full menu), and two dining areas beyond (an airy room with tall walls, and a railing balcony); half two, on the west, is the large sunken dining room with a cherry floor and dark green wainscoting. Chef Michael Romano gives the primarily American menu lots of Italian and French touches.)

It was found among the closed bars as (Union Square Café) and celebrated for its (Publishing lunch crowd. Noisy, high-ceilinged rooms. Expensive.) Its coordinates were recorded as (Union Square Café 21 E. 16th St. btwn Fifth Ave. & Union Sq. W. 212.243.4020 L; N. R; 4. 5.6 at 14th St. -Union Sq.) and as (Union Square Cafe, 21 E. 16th St. (Fifth Ave./Union Sq. W.), 243-4020, $E; Contemporary.)* Its dishes lingered in guidebooks — (Potatoes, mashed), (Pie, key lime), (Fish, tuna steak), (Soup, black bean), and (Game) — each paired with (Union Square Cafe (21 E 16th St)).

But the most portentous development in urban transportation at the turn of the century . . .

The pictures on this and the following page were taken by Alice Austen, whose remarkable photographs of life in and around New York at the turn of the century were rediscovered two years ago. Miss Austen was born and spent most of her life on Staten Island. But wherever she went she took her camera with her, taking pictures which are startlingly direct and observant.

The photograph above, of a cabby and his hansom, was taken in Union Square, at Broadway and Sixteenth Street, in 1896. The one below, taken in October, 1888, shows Miss Julia Martin, a Staten Island neighbor, in her jaunting cart in front of the Martins' house.

virtue of the banking privilege included in its charter, the company won such a reputation for financial strength and solidity that the founders of the Dry-Dock Savings Bank thought it well to perpetuate the title in association with a financial institution.

The Bank of the Metropolis is a flourishing outgrowth of the movement of business to the up-town section of New York. Union Square, where its banking house is established, was thirty years ago a fashionable residence-district. To-day it is surrounded by some of the largest retail business houses in New York, and important manufacturing and wholesale industries are plentiful in the neighborhood. The magnitude of these interests is attested by the success of this prosperous institution, the business of which is derived from their requirements, and which is conducted in a manner to attract the custom and support of the dry-goods, furniture, jewelry, and other classes of merchants whose places of business are in the vicinity. The bank was organized in 1871, and commenced operations in June of that year. The first President was W. A. Kissam (who died in the same year), and the original place of business was 31 Union Square. A removal to 17 Union Square followed six years later, and in 1888 the bank took the more commodious quarters at 29 Union Square, which it now occupies. Robert Schell, the President, who has held the position steadily for twenty years, was formerly a well-known jewelry merchant in Maiden Lane. William B. Isham, the Vice-President (since 1885), was prominent in the leather trade; and the Cashier, Theodore Rogers, has occupied the same position since the formation of the bank. The Board of Directors is a remarkably strong body, comprising representatives of houses which are known not only in New York but throughout the United States. They are Charles L. Tiffany, of Tiffany & Company; Hon. Samuel Sloan, President of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad; Robert Schell, the President; Joseph Park, of Park & Tilford; William Steinway, of Steinway & Sons; William B. Isham, capitalist; W. D. Sloane, of W. & J. Sloane; and Hicks Arnold, of Arnold, Constable & Company. The bank has a deposit line of nearly $7,000,000; and a surplus of $700,000 has been accumulated on the capital of $300,000. The shares of the Bank of the Metropolis have a market value of over $400 each.

An institution of such solidity and enterprise, and with such widely and favorably known officers and directors, is of great benefit to business in the up-town district.

UNITY CENTER OF PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY

widely known for her generosity and unflagging support of worthy causes. When she died in 1938, The New York Times called her "the best-loved woman in the country." At the time the stable was constructed, the stretch of 58th Street between Fifth Avenue and Broadway resembled a mews. Area residents stabled their horses here, while those who enjoyed driving through nearby Central Park appreciated the convenience of the commercial livery in the area. Gould, who lived in the Fifth Avenue mansion bequeathed to her by her father, demolished an existing stable to make way for this carriage house.

Architect Phillip Sawyer had studied for a year at the École des Beaux-Arts in Paris, and elements of this Parisian-style façade suggest the uniform, symmetrical elevations of the Place des Vosges. A suave, dignified effect is achieved by the building's subtle verticality, the attenuated hipped slate roof and tall flanking chimneys, and the limestone tethering rings at the arched entrance. Ornamentation, like the flat voussoirs of the third-story windows and the triglyph brackets supporting the cornice, imbue this chiefly utilitarian building with an unmistakable air of luxury.

In 1921, the building was converted to a garage, with space for four automobiles and an apartment for the chauffeur on the second and third floors. The interior was renovated as a shoe show room and two apartments in 1957; since 1982, it has housed a church, the Unity Center of Practical Christianity. A façade restoration was completed in 2007.

(FORMER) BANK OF THE METROPOLIS

31 UNION SQUARE WEST (ALSO KNOWN AS 19–23 EAST 16TH STREET), MANHATTAN

ARCHITECT: BRUCE PRICE

DESIGNATED: JULY 12, 1988

Founded in 1871, the Bank of the Metropolis was formed to serve the needs of the businesses located around Union Square. In order to attract the business of leading publishers, jewelers, and other merchants, the board of directors included such powerful neighborhood businessmen as Louis Comfort Tiffany and Charles Scribner. The bank was absorbed by the Bank of the Manhattan Company in 1918; the resulting entity merged with Chase in 1955 to become the Chase Manhattan Bank, now JP Morgan Chase & Co.

Occupying a commanding corner location, the building superbly demonstrates Bruce Price's ability to use the requirements of function, the dictates of site, and a classical vocabulary to create a skyscraper that emanates authority. The neo-Renaissance limestone tower is enhanced by classical elements traditionally associated with American bank architecture—most notably, a bowed two-story portico with monumental polished-granite columns, lions' heads, consoles, and foliated spandrels.

The site demanded a long, thin example of a Romanesque Revival-style commercial building. Faced with gray granite, limestone, and brick and decorated with terra cotta, the building, considered a skyscraper when built, exemplifies the transition between masonry and later steel framework construction. Note the multiwindow cornice.

No. 5-9, the Spingler Building, faced with brown brick and ornate terra cotta, dates from the late 1890s and displays typical Romanesque Revival features. In the Gilded Age, many luxury establishments opened on the Square, particularly along the west side. Tiffany's famed jewelry establishment moved up from lower Broadway in 1870 and opened an elegant showroom. Brentano's soon followed, one block north, calling itself "New York's Literary Emporium" and attracting a host of loyal readers. It is interesting to note that Agosto Brentano, who came to America as a poor cripple from Sicily, eked out a living selling newspapers and periodicals, and ultimately became the most famous book dealer in the country.

The 1960s modern "skin" of No. 11-15, the main office of the Amalgamated Bank of New York, hides a cast-iron structure within. The building, which was designed in 1869 by John Kellum, had housed the showrooms and silversmith operations of Charles Tiffany, until he moved uptown in 1906. The bank opened on the site in 1923 under the auspices of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union and is reputed to be the only one in the United States owned entirely by a union. No. 25, the Carlyle Court, formerly an apartment building, is one of New York University's numerous far-flung dormitories.

No. 31, the former Bank of the Metropolis (Bruce Price, 1902), is a fine example of the architect's favored Renaissance Revival style. Although the building's front features polished marble columns, the entire structure is, in effect, columnar or tripartite in form, with a base, shaft, and capital represented by its three stone sections. The bank, founded in 1871, served local businesses until 1918, when it merged with the Bank of the Manhattan Company (now J. P. Morgan Chase). A restaurant occupies the main floor with residences above.

No. 33, originally the Decker Building, now the Union Building (Alfred Zucker, with John Edelman, 1892), displays the almost limitless possibilities of terra-cotta adornment, in this case with unusual Moorish Revival motifs. Built for the Decker Piano Company, its highly ornate façade was a singular attraction. Edelman, who was Zucker's designer, was influenced by his friend and teacher, Chicago architect Louis Sullivan, and the building exhibits many obvious Sullivanian touches. In the early 1990s, the building was renovated for condominiums by Joseph Pell Lombardi & Associates. 845.1

On the west side of the park stood a bronze fountain sculpture group on a tall pedestal, depicting a woman holding a baby in one arm and helping a child hold a water pitcher in the other, by German sculptor Adolf Donndorf and presented to the city in 1881. The large pedestal was festooned with lions' heads and a variety of animals, insects, and lizards. (Temporarily removed during park renovation.)

Enter the park, walk toward the center, and turn left to the heroic bronze Statue of Abraham Lincoln (Henry Kirke Brown, 1868). The statue was funded by popular subscription and shows the Great Emancipator in a pose as if address-

An early and unwitting sliver building, this neo-Renaissance slab now houses a restaurant in its original banking rooms, a place for SUPERMAN'S lunch.

Fig. 281. Bank of the Metropolis (left), northwest corner of Sixteenth Street and Union Square West, 1905. The sixteen-story skyscraper, designed by Bruce Price in 1901, was symbolic of the tall structures invading Ladies Mile in the early twentieth century and hastening the retreat of the fashionable shopping district up Fifth Avenue above Thirty-fourth Street. The Union Building, a Moorish-Venetian structure designed by Alfred Zucker in 1891, stands next to the bank. (Courtesy of the New-York Historical Society, New York City)

mous electric plant using sixteen tons of coal per day powering sixteen elevators, a plant making fifty tons of ice per day, and a huge set of boilers heating hot water for all of the suites, were additional luxuries.⁶

More than a dozen ladies' tailoring establishments could be found in the 1900 business directories of New York, in close proximity to the new Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Downtown along Ladies Mile, the Spingler Building (5–9 Union Square West), constructed in 1896, anticipated the coming decades that would turn the area into a wholesale manufacturing district. By 1900, the Spingler Building contained many shirtwaist-makers in its upper stories. The following year, Bruce Price designed the sixteen-story office tower for the Bank of the Metropolis on the northwest corner of Sixteenth Street and Union Square West (fig. 281). Here, too, the upper floors were rented to at least three shirtwaist-makers, three different ladies' and childrens' undergarment manufacturers, in addition to six different architectural offices.⁷ The side streets near Ladies Mile were also invaded by lofty buildings used to house the expanding garment industry that now reached as far north as Thirty-sixth Street. Ten- and twelve-story loft buildings, sometimes as narrow as one city lot, were erected by the hundreds, flooding the fashionable shopping district with thousands of sweatshop workers who had little extra money to purchase the goods in the fancy shop windows along Ladies Mile, but lent the area an unsavory quality.⁸

must have been very tired by then. There is none of the life of Hardenbergh's Dakota, Plaza, or Art Students League in this heavy, ponderous mass. The Warren & Wetmore tower is actually better, although all of the columns and statuary melded into its upper portions give it rather an air of the Vittorio Emanuele monument in Rome. It seems to represent an awkward moment just between Beaux-Arts monumentality and modernist sleekness, and by no stretch of the imagination does the tower demonstrate the better side of either style. Indeed, it is more like a fight between the two, with the elaborate top fighting the austerity of the shaft, and the shaft itself fighting the heavy details up and down its corners. One is thankful, though, for the grand clock atop the tower; it gives the building at least one benign role in the cityscape.

II A 3 · 145 FOURTH AVENUE

SE corner 14th Street

Horace Ginsbern & Associates, 1965

Worth looking at for the zigzag along Fourth Avenue, which provides visual interest as well as diagonally set windows to give south light and views to west-facing apartments. More important still, it is an attempt to accommodate the building's overall form to the bend of Fourth Avenue: good urbanism, not unlike the similar gesture at 240 Central Park South (II G 13). A rare piece of thoughtful postwar apartment design.

II A 4 · 31 UNION SQUARE WEST (Bank of the Metropolis)

NW corner, 16th Street

Bruce Price, 1902

This narrow old bank is one of the city's more appealing smaller towers, a lovely eclectic creation. There is a wonderful, gently bowed Ionic portico at the bottom, a slender, almost sleek shaft, and an enormous, elaborate cornice. It feels like a building Louis Sullivan would have designed had he been a Beaux-Arts architect; some of the ornament even seems a watered-down version of Sullivan's, although the overall aesthetic is clearly a more classical and academic one. Price never quite found a style and never did a truly great building, but he was a deft, intuitive maker of compositions, and this is one of his best works.

II A 5 · 33 UNION SQUARE WEST

between 16th and 17th streets

Alfred Zucker, 1893

This is one of those buildings that are entertaining more than seriously good; on the other hand, there is nothing really wrong with it, either. It is wildly eclectic, almost hysterical in its stylistic swings and absurd excesses, yet it retains a certain slender poise in spite of itself. If the Siegel-Cooper 14th and 15th streets. Designed by Davis, Brody & Associates and built in 1987, this massive apartment and office complex represents the most strenuous effort to date to gentrify the neighborhood. The basic ungentrifiability of Union Square, however, is verified by the fact that Zeckendorf Towers turns its back on the square and places its main entrance around the block on the relatively tranquil and attractive Irving Place. The quartet of illuminated pyramids that top Zeckendorf Towers have become a conspicuous skyline feature, and sadly block the uptown view of the lighted clock face of the Consolidated Edison Building across the street at Four Irving Place, an ill-proportioned, but finely detailed, neoclassical base (1915, Henry J. Hardenbergh), surmounted by an ill-proportioned, but finely detailed, neoclassical tower (1926, Warren and Wetmore) which bears the clock.

At 20 Union Square East (Park Avenue South), at the northeast corner of 15th Street, is the American Savings Bank, designed by Henry Bacon and built in 1907. This is a compact building with an incredibly stately porch with four massive Corinthian columns. It is the only major building in New York by Bacon, who designed the Lincoln Memorial (1922) in Washington, D.C., and who was one of America's finest classical architects. At 201 Park Avenue South, at the northeast corner of 17th Street, is the Guardian Life Insurance Building of 1911, by D'Oench & Yost. It is a brooding, mansarded affair, exactly the kind of building that should be constructed to wall a square such as Union. Appended to it, at 105 East 17th Street between Park Avenue South and Irving Place, is a Miesian modern annex dating from 1961 and designed by Skidmore, Owings & Merrill.

The Century Building, former headquarters of one of the most popular magazines of the nineteenth century, stands at 33 East 17th Street between Park Avenue South and Broadway. Built in 1881 and designed by William Schickel, this red-brick-and-limestone Queen Anne pile comes straight out of Victorian London. It is one of the few extant major Queen Anne buildings in Manhattan; see also the Gramercy apartments (1883, G. W. da Cunha, 8.7) at Gramercy Park, and the former Mercantile Exchange (1884, Thomas R. Jackson, 3.12) in TriBeCa. The former Bank of the Metropolis, designed by Bruce Price, at 31 Union Square West, at the northwest corner of 16th Street, was built in 1903 and is another gem from the perhaps underrated father of Emily Post. Its Union Square was designed to attract the attention of riders on the Sixth Avenue Elevated, which ran in front of the building.

195 5, 7, 9, 17, 19, 21, and 23 West 16th Street (c. 1845–46), designated individually 1990. In the 1840s the streets adjacent to Fifth Avenue just north of 14th Street were developed with row houses. Most of these structures were demolished as commerce invaded the area in the late 19th century, but West 16th Street retains a significant number of Greek Revival houses. The most impressive are the four survivors of a row of nine wide houses—Nos. 5, 7, 9, and 17—each of which has a full-height curving bay on its front facade, an extremely rare feature in New York. In 1930 the family-planning pioneer Margaret Sanger moved her Birth Control Clinical Research Bureau into No. 17. Nos. 19 and 21 are simpler houses displaying fine ironwork, while No. 23 has a magnificent cast-iron balcony and stoop railing. All the houses have wide stone entrance enframements with battered sides and eared corners; this is a classic Greek form copied from the window surrounds on Greek temples.

197 Lincoln Building, 1–3 Union Square West (R. H. Robertson, 1889–90), designated 1988. The Lincoln Building is representative of the early skyscraper form as it evolved in New York, where architects chose to adapt already-popular styles to this new building type. Robertson designed the Lincoln Building in the same Romanesque Revival style that he used for churches, houses, and other structures. The building, faced in limestone, granite, red brick, and terra cotta, marks an important transitional phase in skyscraper engineering; it was constructed with a metal framing in combination with traditional masonry bearing walls.

198 Bank of the Metropolis, 31 Union Square West (Bruce Price, 1902–03), designated 1988. Price was an important early skyscraper designer with a particular interest in adapting the tripartite form of the column to tall buildings. This neo-Renaissance limestone-faced example is clearly massed in Price's preferred base-shaft-capital manner. The Bank of the Metropolis, founded in 1871 to serve the needs of businesses in the Union Square area, maintained its offices on the square until 1918, when it was absorbed by the Bank of Manhattan.

199 Decker Building, now the Union Building, 33 Union Square West (John Edelmänn in the employ of Alfred Zucker, 1892–93), designated 1988. A rare example of a Moorish-inspired skyscraper, the headquarters of the Decker Piano Company was designed by John Edelmänn, mentor and friend of Louis Sullivan. Many features of the Decker Building, most notably the naturalistic ornament, reflect Sullivan's influence. Between 1968 and 1974 Andy Warhol's Factory occupied the sixth floor. The base was handsomely restored in 1995.

200 Century Building, now Barnes & Noble Bookstore, 33 East 17th Street (William Schickel, 1880–81), designated 1986. The red brick Century Building is a rare New York example of a Queen Anne-style commercial structure. Erected to house the prestigious Century Publishing Company, publisher of The Century and St. Nicholas magazines, the building is characteristic of the finest Queen Anne design in its free use of classical motifs in stone and terra cotta and its employment of the style's trademark sunflowers. After standing vacant for many years, the building was converted into a bookstore, and the facade received an award-winning restoration.

201 Everett Building, 200 Park Avenue South (Goldwin Starrett & Van Vleck, 1908), designated 1988. Located on the north side of Union Square, the Everett Building exemplifies an important development in the design of commercial high-rise buildings—the construction of functional, fireproof structures with large windows, open floor space, and simple classical detail. This emphasis on functionalism reflects the influence of Chicago skyscraper designs; in fact, the architect, Goldwin Starrett, had worked for four years in the Chicago office of Daniel Burnham.

202 Gorham Manufacturing Company Building, 895–891 Broadway (Edward Hale Kendall, 1883–84; alteration, John H. Duncan, 1912), designated 1984. This commercial building in the Queen Anne style was erected for the Gorham Manufacturing Company, a leading American silver firm, for its retail outlet in the exclusive Ladies' Mile shopping district. The Gorham is an early example of a mixed-use building: only the lower two floors were occupied by the store; the upper floors were rented as bachelor apartments. By 1893, however, the building was entirely in commercial use. The architect John H. Duncan is responsible for a remodeling of the building in 1912 that entailed the removal of a corner tower and the addition of roof dormers. The building now contains shops at street level and apartments above.

203 Lord & Taylor Store, 901 Broadway (James H. Giles, 1869–70), designated 1977. Two English immigrants, Samuel Lord and George Taylor, founded the dry goods firm a move that was rigorously opposed by the Union Square Community Coalition, a group largely made up of newer residents who had moved into lofts and apartments and feared the impact of real estate speculation on their rented homes. Efforts to rezone Zeckendorf's site coincided with a broader reassessment of the area's zoning, which had been studied in 1979–80 by Hardy Holzman Pfeiffer Associates. Those recommendations formed the basis, in 1984, of the Department of City Planning's proposed special zoning district, intended to encourage mixed-use development on underutilized sites in the park's vicinity, especially Zeckendorf's proposed one-million-square-foot project.¹⁹ Both the district and the Zeckendorf proposal for a twenty-six-story project were approved by the City Planning Commission in November 1984 and by the Board of Estimate in January 1985.²⁰ Concerns about the fate of historic buildings on other sites around the square led to the designation as landmarks of the Lincoln Building (R. H. Robertson, 1890), 1–3 Union Square West; the Bank of the Metropolis (Bruce Price, 1903), 31 Union Square West; the Century Building (William Schickel, 1881), 33 East Seventeenth Street; the Everett Building (Starrett & Van Vleck, 1908), 45 East Seventeenth Street; and the Germania Life Insurance Company Building (D'Oench & Yost, 1911), later the Guardian Life Building, 50 Union Square East.²¹

As built, the four twenty-story towers of Zeckendorf's project, unimaginatively titled Zeckendorf Towers, contained 670 condominium apartments rising above a seven-story base housing 320,000 square feet of offices, an atrium, a much-appreciated supermarket, theaters, and underground parking. Though banal in their detailed design, the scheme of slender, salmon-colored brick-clad towers, each topped by an open-work pyramidal crown—dismissed by the editors of the AIA Guide as “illuminated levitating . . . yarmulkes”—minimized shadows on the square and blockage of views from it to the tower of the Consolidated Gas Company Building (Warren & Wetmore, 1926), which they were intended to complement.²² The office floors were entered from Fourth Avenue facing Union Square Park, while the apartments were entered off Fifteenth Street. In its bland uniformity and lock-step regularity, Zeckendorf Towers was hardly inspiring, but it did help the reemerging district turn the economic corner.

While most new construction in the area involved demolition of existing buildings, a through-block parcel that had been vacant since the early 1970s permitted the construction of the twelve-story Genesis Apartments (1995) for ninety-four homeless and low-income families at 113 East Thirteenth Street and an attendant 30,000-square-foot, two-story commercial building at 114 East Fourteenth Street.²³ The project was developed by Housing Enterprise for the Less Privileged (H.E.L.P.), a nonprofit organization founded by Andrew Cuomo, son of New York State Governor Mario Cuomo. As designed by Cooper, Robertson & Partners, the quietly contextual apartment building eschewed all outward signs of social engineering in favor of an expression that many would assume was intended for a much more affluent clientele. Additionally, the building's management program included a program-services staff of fifteen to help the homeless tenants, whose stay was limited to twelve months, make an adjustment back into mainstream society. Genesis provided playgrounds, a day-care center, a basketball court, a library, and a laundry room. Although many in the community were initially opposed to the project, it proved an excellent neighbor.

The retail building on Fourteenth Street, however, was not comparable in quality; its low height, a product of zoning restrictions, contributed to its suburban strip-mall character.

1 Union Square South (1998), designed by Davis, Brody & Associates in association with Schuman, Lichtenstein, Claman & Efron, a twenty-seven-story, 180-unit apartment building atop an eighty-five-foot-high mixed-use retail base that included a fourteen-screen theater, occupied the highly visible 47,500-square-foot full-block site bounded by Fourth Avenue, Thirteenth Street, Broadway, and Fourteenth Street.²⁴ In 1995 the Related Companies had acquired the site from another developer who had cleared it of its buildings, including the historic Union Square Theater (1871; rebuilt, John Terhune and Leopold Eidlitz, 1889), 58 East Fourteenth Street, which had long been obscured behind a huge McDonald's sign.²⁵

Responding to community concerns that this most prominent site might yield yet another business-as-usual apartment house banality, the developers entered into an agreement with the Municipal Art Society to select an architectural firm that would maximize the site's most important attributes, its axial relationship to the vista south along Park Avenue from Grand Central Terminal and its prominent location at the edge of Union Square Park. The society asked two dozen architects to name a firm, besides their own, that they would recommend for the job. From the responses, Related chose three firms to participate in a competition held in 1995: Davis, Brody & Associates, Robert A. M. Stern Architects, and Hardy Holzman Pfeiffer Associates, which later withdrew. Stern proposed an eighteen-story tower on a five-story stone-clad site-filling retail base. The metal-trimmed brick-clad tower was to be set back from the property line to create a strong south terminus for Park Avenue, recalling the campanile-like configuration of Warren & Wetmore's New York Central Building (1929), which, until the construction of the Pan Am Building in 1963, had concluded the axis of Park Avenue on the north side of Grand Central.

Davis, Brody's winning scheme, designed by Steven Davis, son of founding partner Lewis Davis, sought to merge the base with the tower. The initial rendering revealed stylish asymmetrical patterns of windows as well as a deep balcony cut into the north wall. But as built, its blocky mass was pretty banal, the cut reduced to virtual inconsequence, leaving the heavy aesthetic lifting to the work of the artists Kristin Jones and Andrew Ginzel. In a separate competition organized by the Public Art Fund, the two had been chosen to embellish a 100-by-60-foot wall on the building's north facade, between the commercial base and the tower. Jones and Ginzel proposed Metronome, confronting the street with a brick wall overlaid with an undulating wavelike pattern of concentric circles and a so-called eye, a four-foot-in-diameter opening that emitted clouds of steam, clearly upstaging the rather tepid facade of the host building. The steam, intended by the artists to recall the geothermal outpouring of Old Faithful, poured forward twice a day, at noon and at midnight, as part of the artists' intention to examine time itself. Each emission was enhanced by the sounding of a long, tapered horn intended to echo the passage of time. A digital clock on the left side of the wall augmented the frequent movements of the city by simultaneously counting and subtracting the hours of the day, with the converging digits in the middle absorbed by a blur of activity, intended to suggest the present.

late 1960s–1970s

844

21 East 16th Street (Fifth Ave./University Pl.)

Samuel Brown's natural foods restaurant and store was one of the longest-running vegetarian establishments in New York history. Started in 1936, Brownie's became a destination for health fanatics, vegetarians, Factory associates, and Warhol after his shooting in 1968 when his doctor told him to keep an eye on his diet. He would later become an advocate for vegetarianism

Union Square Cafe

21 E. 16th St. (Fifth Ave./Union Square W.), 243-4020. Contemporary American. Expensive; AE/CB/DC/MC/V. Lunch: Monday-Saturday; Dinner: Daily. Union Square Cafe became one of the final transforming presences in the neighborhood when it opened in 1985, a natural extension of a revamped park and a tremendously successful greenmarket. Danny Meyer's restaurant is broken into four precincts in two halves: half one, as you enter, includes the long dining bar (featuring oyster and wine specials, and the full menu), and two dining areas beyond (an airy room with tall walls, and a railing balcony); half two, on the west, is the large sunken dining room with a cherry floor and dark green wainscoting. Chef Michael Romano gives the primarily American menu lots of Italian and French touches.

Vong

200 E. 54th St. (Third Ave.), 486-9592. Contemporary Thai/French. Expensive; AE/DC/MC/V. Lunch: Monday-Friday; Dinner: Daily.

This is not family-style Thai food, but Thai as interpreted by a great French chef. Chef-proprietor Jean-Georges Vongerichten spent two years in Bangkok before successes first in the now-defunct Lafayette, and then in his East Side bistro JoJo. Vong, with high ceilings and decorated in theatrical oranges and reds, is in Philip Johnson's "Lipstick Building." The stage-set decor includes a tatami-style dining barge with slated windows and a Thai-temple-inspired proscenium alcove. The restaurant is often filled by 8 P.M. Vongerichten also runs the Lipstick Cafe in the lobby.

Zarela

953 Second Ave. (50th/51st Sts.), 644-6740. Mexican. Moderately expensive; AE/CB/DC. Lunch: Monday-Friday; Dinner: Daily.

This Mexican restaurant is on two floors: a comfortable, lively bar and small dining room on the first floor, and a larger, gracious, full dining room above. Mexican folk art (papier-mâché masks, paper cutouts, carved statues) decorate both floors. Citric at the bar and hot peppers at the tables.

Zen Palate

663 Ninth Ave. (46th St.), 582-1669. Vegetarian. Moderately expensive;
AE/MC/V. Lunch: Daily; Dinner: Daily.

View

Contrary to the axiom that good food generally does not come with a good view, the food at all of these "rooms with a view" is good.

Alma (187 Columbia St, Brooklyn): magical rooftop garden
American Park (Battery Park, off State St)
Delegates' Dining Room (United Nations, First Ave at 42nd St, visitors' entrance)
River Cafe (1 Water St, Brooklyn): A window seat affords the famous view of the downtown skyline you've always seen on postcards and in movies.
Tavern on the Green (Central Park W at 67th St): magical!
The View (Marriott Marquis Hotel, 1535 Broadway): revolves high above Times Square
Top of the Tower (3 Mitchell Pl): an art deco penthouse delight Water Club (500 E 30th St, at East River): Try the view with Sunday brunch.
World Yacht Cruises (Pier 81, W 41st St at Hudson River): Manhattan from the water
